

The Global Media Monitoring Project is an initiative that scrutinizes selected indicators on gender in the world's major news media. It's the largest and longest study on gender in the world's news media, taking place one every five years since 1995. It is also the largest advocacy initiative in the world towards news media that is supportive of dismantling gender-based discrimination and inequalities.